The Institute's mission is to bring the issues of personal health freedom to the forefront of the American health policy debate. The Institute has five major research programs, Children's Health Care, Health Insurance, Medicare, Monopoly in Medicine, and Medical Privacy.

The Children's Health Care program helps identify ways to cover uninsured children, while maintaining parental control over children's health care decisions. The Health Insurance Program helps identify ways to put health insurance back in the hands of consumers.

The Medicare program helps identify barriers to seniors' freedom to choose their own doctors and pay privately for the medical treatments of their choice.

The Monopoly in Medicine program helps identify anti-competitive barriers in the health care system. The Medical Privacy program helps identify ways to protect individuals' personal medical records.
